Title: Douglas McMurtrie Papers

Call Number: Coll310

Creator: McMurtrie, Douglas Crawford

Dates: 1919-1944

Size: 2 boxes (1.5 linear feet) Language: English, German

Abstract: This collection contains the typographical scholarship of Douglas Crawford McMurtrie between 1919 and 1944. There are few instances of other authors that wrote on similar subjects or publications that are published in German, although majority of the materials are written in English. Those publications have been kept in the collections and interwoven into the arrangement of the collection.

Administrative/Biographical Note

Douglas Crawford McMurtrie (July 20, 1888- September 29, 1944) was an American typeface designer, historian, and one of the most important bibliographers of printing. After leaving Massachusetts Institute of Technology (MIT) before graduating, he worked as a newspaper reporter and printing broker. Over several years, some of McMurtie's earliest and noted appointments were as general manager of the Cheltenham Press, then as printing manager of the Columbia University Printing Office, the Arbor Press, and Conde Nast Press. McMurtie designed two typefaces, helped design the format of the New Yorker Magazine, and was instrumental in forming the Continental Type Founders Association, which imported types from Europe, serving as the company's first vice president. In the mid 1920s, he became the editor of the prestigious Ars Typographica magazine. Later in his career, McMurtrie became the typographic director of the Cuneo Press before becoming the director of advertising and typography at Ludlow typograph Company.
